‘People there value education more than they do in the UK’

Nicolai Taylor

Supervisors expect to see evidence that the students have a good understanding of the learning outcomes. They believe that the students are making good progress, but there is room for improvement. The supervisors also expect to see evidence of the students’ ability to apply their knowledge and skills in a real-world context.

Education

BRENTWOOD: An inadequate Primary School is slow for the students and the school is not making the most of its resources. The school is not providing a good enough education for all the students. The school needs to improve its teaching and learning, and ensure that all students are achieving their full potential.

One of the students was a much larger boy who travelled 5,000 miles to Malawi to experience work. He said: “It was so touching.”

When it came to work experience, he said: “It was a great experience.”

He hopes others will be inspired to do the same.
